If you are not sure you belong to Christ

Some readers will pick up this book without being sure whether they are Christians, or whether they still are. You are welcome here. The sessions assume a reader who wants to be honest with God, and you can be that whether or not you are certain about him.

The Christian claim, stated as simply as I can, is this. God made you, knows you, and loves you. Every one of us has turned from him in ways large and small, and we cannot repair that from our side. So God came to us in Jesus, who lived the life we have not lived, died on a cross for the wrong we have done, and was raised from the dead. Anyone who turns to him and trusts him is forgiven, received into God's family, and given his Spirit, not because they have earned it but because he is generous. That is what this book means when it speaks of belonging to Christ, of adoption, and of grace.

If you want to respond to that, you do not need polished words. Tell Jesus honestly that you are turning to him and placing your trust in him. Session One's prayer, "I am here," is a simple place to begin, not a formula. Then tell a Christian you trust, speak with a pastor, or email me at info@faithfulpathcommunity.com, and let someone walk with you. If you are not ready, or not sure, keep reading anyway. Honesty before God is the beginning of everything, and this book is an invitation to it.
